CAMP ORDWAY. National, Guard of the District of Columbia, Colonial Beach, Va., August 23.—Staff officers of the National Guard of the District of Columbia were called into the tent of Brig. Gen. William E. Harvey this morning for a conference to complete the details for breaking camp. It now seems probable that this camp will not be "broken" to the sound of "The General" on the bugle. When "The General" is sounded from the brigade headquarters it is the custom to have the folds of an army blanket rested in the bright sun.

Harries did the latter get an inkling that he was to be signally honored by the brigade with which he was con-nected for twenty-seven years, seven-teen of which he was in command. He retired from active service only a few months ago.

In fact, so well was the secret kept that it was known only to those who contributed to the purchase of the equipment with which Gen. Flarries was presented, and hardly a soldier in the camp knew that following the dress parade he would witness an unsual ceremony.

of the District of Columbia passed through its first parade yesterday, and the first time it has paraded as a brigade unit since the War Department turned it topsy turvy in the work of reorganization.

Every company was at its best as it appeared on the parade grounds before Maj. Gen. Harries and Brig. Gen. William E. Harvey, now commanding the brigade and Gen. Harries' successor. The troops received cheer after cheer from the crowd which lined the drill grounds, the largest which has been present at any of the parades. Every movement was done as a unit, showing that the District soldiers have not let time slide unprofitably by during the one week of field service ending tonight.
